1 Is your state a party to the New York Convention? Are there any noteworthy declarations or reservations?

Russia is a party to the New York Convention. In 1960, the USSR made a reservation that it shall apply the provisions of the Convention in respect of arbitral awards made in the territories of non-contracting states only to the extent to which they grant reciprocal treatment. This reservation is still in force for Russia.

2 Is your state a party to any other bilateral or multilateral treaties regarding the recognition and enforcement of arbitral awards?

Russia is a party to the European Convention on International Commercial Arbitration 1961, which contains the reference to the New York Convention in relation to recognition and enforcement of the arbitral awards in case of set aside proceedings.

In addition, Russia, as well as some former COMECON members, is still a party to the Moscow Convention on the Settlement by Arbitration of Civil Law Disputes Arising from Relations of Economic, Scientific and Technical Cooperation 1972. Article IV of that Convention sets forth that the awards shall be recognised without any further procedure and shall be subject to enforcement in any country party to the Convention in the same manner as judgments passed by the state courts of the country of execution and that have come into legal force.

Russia is a signatory to the Washington (ICSID) Convention from 16 June 1992, but has not ratified it yet.

3 Is there an arbitration act or equivalent and, if so, is it based on the UNCITRAL Model Law? Does it apply to all arbitral proceedings with their seat in your jurisdiction?

Russia has a dual arbitration regime distinguishing domestic arbitration proceedings and international arbitration proceedings seated in Russia.

The Law of the Russian Federation No. 5338-1 dated 7 July 1993 on International Commercial Arbitration (the ICA Law) governs international arbitration proceedings seated in Russia. Certain provisions also apply to arbitral proceedings seated outside Russia: obligation of a court to refer parties to arbitration if a party so requests and if a matter brought before the court is the subject of an arbitration agreement; the right to apply for interim measures in courts; recognition and enforcement of awards. The ICA Law closely follows the Russian text of the UNCITRAL Model Law as adopted in 1985 (the Model Law).

Federal Law No. 382-ФЗ dated 29 December 2015 on Arbitration (Arbitration Proceedings) in the Russian Federation (the DCA Law) entered into force on 1 September 2016 and replaced the previous law of 2002. The DCA Law applies to domestic arbitration with certain provisions applicable to international commercial arbitration seated in Russia, including provisions on record keeping, liability of institutions and arbitrators, mandatory notification of a legal entity on corporate disputes between its shareholders, admission of the foreign arbitral institutions to act as a permanent arbitral institution in Russia, etc. The latter aspect as well as several others was significantly simplified by the December 2018 amendments into the DCA Law.

The content of the DCA Law with respect to procedural issues of arbitral proceedings has been largely unified with the ICA Law to reduce practical differences to minimum.

4 What arbitration bodies relevant to international arbitration are based within your jurisdiction? Do such bodies also act as appointing authorities?

Before the Russian arbitration reform, all arbitral institutions in Russia had a right to administer cases. Since 1 November 2017, almost all arbitral institutions lost their right to administer cases unless they had obtained a permission from the Ministry of Justice of the Russian Federation and became recognised as a “permanent arbitral institution” in Russia. Two major arbitral institutions were recognised as permanent ones automatically without the requirement of obtaining a permission: the International Commercial Arbitration Court (ICAC, or MKAS) and Maritime Arbitration Commission at the Chamber of Commerce and Industry of the Russian Federation.

As of the beginning of 2021, three Russian arbitral institutions have obtained a permission and the right to administer disputes – the Russian Arbitration Centre at the Russian Institute of Modern Arbitration (RIMA), Arbitration Centre at the Russian Union of Industrialists and Entrepreneurs, and National Centre for Sports Arbitration at the autonomous non-profit organisation Sports Arbitration Chamber.

In January 2017, the ICAC approved special rules whereby it acts as appointing authority. The Arbitration Centre at the Russian Union of Industrialists and Entrepreneurs has the provisions to the same in the Arbitration Rules adopted in June 2018. The RIMA Arbitration Rules, effective from 13 March 2019, do not envisage such service.

5 Can foreign arbitral providers operate in your jurisdiction?

Yes. Foreign arbitration institutions may also receive the status of a “permanent arbitral institution” in the event of obtaining a permission issued by the Ministry of Justice of the Russian Federation. The DCA Law expressly provides only one requirement for foreign institutions to receive a permission, which is a “widely accepted international reputation”. In the absence of the permission, arbitrations administered by foreign providers shall be treated as ad hoc arbitrations. In addition, they are prohibited from administering any corporate disputes seated in Russia (see question 8). Furthermore, in order to administer Russian domestic disputes, such foreign institutions have to open a branch or representative office in Russia (article 44(6.2) of the DCA Law).

So far, only two foreign arbitral institutions obtained a permission – the Hong Kong International Arbitration Centre (HKIAC) and the Vienna International Arbitral Centre (VIAC).

The only exemption is provided by the DCA Law with respect to foreign legal entities who redomiciled to Russia from abroad (international companies). Foreign arbitral institutions may administer disputes under arbitration agreements between shareholders of such entities entered in prior to the relocation without the need to obtain the admission from the Ministry of Justice.

6 Is there a specialist arbitration court? Is the judiciary in your jurisdiction generally familiar with, and supportive of, the law and practice of international arbitration?

There are no specialist arbitration courts in Russia. Arbitration-related cases fall within the jurisdiction of the Arbitrazh (state commercial) courts of the Russian Federation. Due to Moscow being the place of the majority of arbitrations in Russia, a large part of arbitration-related cases are tried by the Arbitrazh court of Moscow city (a first instance court) and the Arbitrazh court of Moscow Region (a court of cassation appeal). Both courts have accumulated significant experience in cases dealing with challenges and enforcements of arbitral awards. There are no specifically assigned judges or divisions within those courts to deal with arbitration matters on a permanent basis.

Russian courts remain to be supportive of international arbitration in general, and the statistics is steady (see also question 45). Certain contradictory rulings in recent years gave reasons for concern, including the ones of 2018 in Inzhtranstroy case on the ICC standard clause and on procurement contracts of state-controlled companies. However, the Supreme Court of the Russian Federation effectively wiped out the negative effect of the latter by the Review of the Jurisprudence of 26 December 2018 devoted solely to international and domestic arbitration (see also question 8). The Review reconfirmed the pro-arbitration approach of the Supreme Court and was welcomed by the arbitration community. On 10 December 2019, the Plenum of the Supreme Court issued a Resolution fully devoted to assistance and control functions by Russian courts in relation to international commercial arbitration.

Agreement to arbitrate

7 What, if any, requirements must be met if an arbitration agreement is to be valid and enforceable under the law of your jurisdiction? Can an arbitration agreement cover future disputes?

An arbitration agreement shall be in writing and refer to a specific legal relationship. In this aspect, the ICA Law and the DCA Law replicate the text of article 7 of the Model Law. In addition, both national laws provide that arbitration agreement may be a part of a corporate charter or registered trading rules (with a few exceptions). It may cover existing and future disputes, whether contractual or not.

8 Are any types of dispute non-arbitrable? If so, which?

As a general rule, all disputes are arbitrable unless otherwise provided by a federal law (article 1(4) of the ICA Law, article 1(3) of the DCA Law). Article 33 of the Arbitrazh Procedure Code (APC) indicates that bankruptcy, public acts and collective actions, as well as certain types of corporate and IP disputes are subject to exclusive jurisdiction of commercial courts. Article 22.1(2) of the Civil Procedure Code (CPC) adds to this list the disputes arising out of: family relations, employment relations, inheritance relations, environmental damage, relations governed by the legislation on the contract system in the field of procurement, privatisation of state and municipal property, compensation for damage caused to life and health, and some other.

The disputes relating to public procurement are temporary non-arbitrable – until the law governing the procedure for determination of the arbitral institution for administration of such cases is adopted. In December 2018, both the Supreme Court in the Review of the Court Practice and the legislator confirmed that the public procurement prohibition shall be interpreted narrowly and shall not cover procurement contracts of Russian state-controlled companies. But in accordance with DCA Law (as amended in December 2018) such disputes having their seat in Russia shall be administered by a “permanent arbitral institution”.

The DCA Law finally confirmed that in general, corporate disputes are arbitrable. The following conditions shall be satisfied for most of the corporate disputes: the seat of arbitration must be in Russia; the dispute must be referred to permanent arbitral institution; the institution must have special rules for corporate disputes; and the arbitration agreement needs to be signed by the legal entity itself, all its shareholders as well as other persons who are claimants or defendants in such disputes, or the arbitration clause is included into the charter of the legal entity (see article 225.1(3) of the APC, articles 7(7), and 45(7), of the DCA Law). Certain categories of corporate disputes are exempted from the two latter requirements following the December 2018 amendments into the DCA Law (see articles 7(7.1) and 45(7.1)).

In the meantime, disputes arising out of procedure of notarial certification of transactions, disputes regarding calling of shareholders’ meeting, disputes related to excluding participants of legal entities, and some minor ones listed in article 225.1(2) of the APC are non-arbitrable. The only exception from this rule applies to Russian international companies (ie, foreign legal entities that redomiciled to Russia from abroad), if the charter of such company contains an arbitration agreement and provides for application of foreign law rules (see details in article 225.1(2.1) of the APC).

9 Can a third party be bound by an arbitration clause and, if so, in what circumstances? Can third parties participate in the arbitration process through joinder or a third-party notice?

As a general principle, no third party could be joined without its expressed consent and expressed consent of the parties to the arbitration proceedings. Both the ICA Law and the DCA Law endorse that arbitration agreements bound not only their original signatories, but also successors and assignees of such signatories.

The DCA Law also contains a rule that arbitral institutions shall notify a legal entity that shareholders and participants started a corporate dispute provided that such legal entity is a party to the arbitration agreement. Following that, other shareholders will be entitled to join the proceedings.

10 Would an arbitral tribunal with its seat in your jurisdiction be able to consolidate separate arbitral proceedings under one or more contracts and, if so, in what circumstances?

The ICA Law, following the Model Law, is silent on the matter. Thus, the matter shall be settled either by agreements of parties or through the applicable rules. Rules of all Russian arbitral institutions contain provisions regarding the possibility to commence a single arbitration for multiple contracts, consolidation of arbitrations, joinder of additional parties, and so on.

11 Is the “group of companies doctrine” recognised in your jurisdiction?

No. However, if as a matter of applicable law, a parent company of a signatory or an assignee becomes a successor with respect to the obligations of a signatory or an assignee, the issue of liability of an affiliated person will be considered.

12 Are arbitration clauses considered separable from the main contract?

Yes. This principle is established in article 16(1) of the ICA Law and article 16(1) of the DCA Law.

13 Is the principle of competence-competence recognised in your jurisdiction? Can a party to an arbitration ask the courts to determine an issue relating to the tribunals jurisdiction and competence?

The principle of competence-competence established in articles 16 of the ICA Law and the DCA Law expressly empower tribunals to decide on an issue of their jurisdiction. This rule is supported by article 148(1)(5) of the APC and article 222 of the CPC, which dictate termination of proceedings where there is an arbitration agreement unless the court finds an arbitration agreement null and void, inoperative or incapable of being performed.

Also as ruled in 2009 by the Supreme Arbitrazh (state commercial) Court of the Russian Federation, the only way of challenging the jurisdiction of a Russia-seated arbitral tribunal is established by article 235 of the APC (ie, a party shall apply to set aside an award on jurisdiction (ruling dated 1 April 2009 No. BAC-3040/09 in case Voskhod v Rual Trade Limited)).

14 Are there particular issues to note when drafting an arbitration clause where your jurisdiction will be the seat of arbitration or the place where enforcement of an award will be sought?

There are no specific statutory requirements as to the drafting language of an arbitration clause. However, parties will be well advised to be specific and use model clauses recommended by institutions to avoid argument on whether a clause is incapable of being performed. Both the ICA and DCA Laws provide a possibility for parties to agree that that an arbitral award would be final, in which case it would not be subject to setting aside. The Russian Supreme Court in the December 2018 Review of Jurisprudence explained that an agreement on finality shall be expressly set out in an arbitration clause and a provision to the same effect contained in applicable arbitration rules would not suffice. Also, the Supreme Court confirmed that an agreement on finality of an arbitral award would not exempt such an award from being challenged based on violation of public policy or non-arbitrability of the dispute.

15 Is institutional international arbitration more or less common than ad hoc international arbitration? Are the UNCITRAL Rules commonly used in ad hoc international arbitrations in your jurisdiction?

Ad hoc arbitrations are not very common in Russia. In most cases, parties prefer to opt for institutional arbitration. Understandably, UNCITRAL Arbitration Rules could also be used by sophisticated parties in major contracts. Another variant of ad hoc proceedings was introduced by the DCA Law. Arbitration proceedings with a seat in Russia that are administered by a foreign provider without a licence from the Russian Ministry of Justice shall be treated as ad hoc even though they are administered by such provider.

The DCA Law provides more privileges to the institutional arbitration (“permanent arbitral institutions”) in comparison to the ad hoc ones. In particular, “permanent arbitral institutions” may request the competent court to assist in obtaining evidence, to consider certain types of disputes (see also question 8). Furthermore, the parties to ad hoc arbitration are not entitled to waive their right of challenging an arbitrator and an award in a state court, etc. Only “permanent arbitral institutions” may administer certain disputes including corporate ones (see question 8).

16 What, if any, are the particular points to note when drafting a multi-party arbitration agreement with your jurisdiction in mind? In relation to, for example, the appointment of arbitrators.

It is very helpful to determine in the arbitration agreement the number of arbitrators and any specific mechanism of their appointment, including the appointing authority, where parties do not reach agreement. It is also important to refer specifically to the right of tribunals to consolidate proceedings and to join other parties of a contract or a series of contracts. However, the drafter shall ensure that all such parties should be signatories to such an arbitration agreement. So, either one would need to produce a single umbrella arbitration agreement or ensure that arbitration clauses in multiple contracts are identical or, at least, compatible and clearly and unequivocally refer to the powers of tribunals to consolidate the proceedings.

Commencing the arbitration

17 How are arbitral proceedings commenced in your jurisdiction? Are there any key provisions under the arbitration laws of your jurisdiction relating to limitation periods of which the parties should be aware?

Some institutions, such as the ICAC, still follow a litigation model where to commence proceedings, it is necessary to submit a statement of claim, although it does not have to be extensive and does not limit the claimant’s ability to submit further filings. However, parties are free to adopt the rules of other institutions or UNCITRAL Arbitration Rules, where the process starts with a request for arbitration.

As a matter of Russian law, the statute of limitations is a part of substantive law. So this issue will be considered as per the law chosen to govern the main contract or according to the conflict of laws rules.

Choice of law

18 How is the substantive law of the dispute determined? Where the substantive law is unclear, how will a tribunal determine what it should be?

The ICA Law, following the Model Law, refers to the choice of parties and, if it was not chosen, a tribunal will apply the law “that it considers applicable” in accordance with the conflict of laws rules.

Appointing the tribunal

19 Does the law of your jurisdiction place any limitations in respect of a party's choice of arbitrator?

No. Parties are free to agree on the number of arbitrators and the appointment procedure. Russian retired judges are also allowed to accept such appointments.

20 Can non-nationals act as arbitrators where the seat is in your jurisdiction or hearings are held there? Is this subject to any immigration or other requirements?

There is no statutory restriction for non-Russian nationals to act as arbitrators. Parties are free to agree on any limitations on this point (article 11(1) of the ICA Law). Usual travel and visa requirements apply.

21 How are arbitrators appointed where no nomination is made by a party or parties or the selection mechanism fails for any reason? Do the courts have any role to play?

Articles 11 of the ICA and the DCA Laws empower a Russian competent court to act as an appointing authority where the parties failed to agree or to follow the agreed procedure and where institutions do not perform their functions under applicable rules.

22 Are arbitrators afforded immunity from suit under the law of your jurisdiction and, if so, in what terms?

The DCA Law provides that arbitrators may be liable only if they are found guilty for committing a crime. However, institutions are free to reduce their fees in accordance with the applicable rules if they fail to perform their duties properly.

The DCA Law also specifies that institutions are liable only for their own faults in the course of administering proceedings. Their rules also may shift the burden of liability to their founders. Any liability could be triggered by gross negligence or deliberate acts and omissions only.

23 Can arbitrators secure payment of their fees in your jurisdiction? Are there fundholding services provided by relevant institutions?

There is no statutory regulation of the issue. Normally, it is settled by arbitration rules and the process will not continue before parties or claimants pay an advance on the arbitrators' fees and arbitration costs.

Challenges to arbitrators

24 On what grounds may a party challenge an arbitrator? How are challenges dealt with in the courts or (as applicable) the main arbitration institutions in your jurisdiction? Will the IBA Guidelines on Conflicts of Interest in International Arbitration generally be taken into account?

Following the approach of the Model Law, parties shall prove their justifiable doubts as to the arbitrator's impartiality or independence (article 12(2) of the ICA Law and the DCA Law). It is also provided that an arbitrator may be challenged if he or she failed to meet requirements stipulated by law or by an agreement of parties. But a party who appointed an arbitrator may challenge him or her only if a ground for challenge became known after the appointment.

Under both the ICA and the DCA Laws (article 13), procedure for challenge replicates the one provided by the Model Law. Courts are named as competent authorities, but parties are free to waive their jurisdiction if the proceedings are administered by an institution.

The Rules of ICAC, RIMA and the Arbitration Centre at the Russian Union of Industrialists and Entrepreneurs provide the respective procedures.

It is normal for parties and arbitrators to refer to the IBA Guidelines. Furthermore, in 2010 the ICAC issued its own Rules on Impartiality and Independence, which generally follow the IBA Guidelines.

Interim relief

25 What main types of interim relief are available in respect of international arbitration and from whom (the tribunal or the courts)? Are anti-suit injunctions available where proceedings are brought elsewhere in breach of an arbitration agreement?

Pursuant to the ICA Law and the APC, the list of interim relief is non-exhaustive (ie, any measures may be granted by both arbitral tribunals and courts in aid of arbitration). However, as a non-final decision, an interim order of an arbitral tribunal is not enforceable in Russia. That is why it is preferable to apply directly to domestic courts at the seat of arbitration, or at the place of the debtor's incorporation, or at the place where the debtor's assets are located.

Russian courts may issue injunctions in support of commercial arbitration (eg, see the case No. A55-22/2016 Telecom Povolzhye v OJSC SMARTS and Bolaro Holding Ltd where Samara Commercial Court issued a freezing injunction in support of an ongoing LCIA arbitration). Anti-suit injunctions could be issued under article 248.2(1) of the APC with respect to disputes involving persons subject to restrictive measures by foreign states or unions.

Anti-suit injunctions ordered by foreign courts are not enforceable in Russia, and they cannot estop a Russian court from trying a case (Information Letter of the Presidium of the Supreme Arbitrazh Court of the Russian Federation of 9 July 2013 No. 158). Russian courts will not secure the attendance of witnesses.

26 Does the law of your jurisdiction allow a court or tribunal to order a party to provide security for costs?

The ICA Law is silent on the security of costs issue. There is also no case law addressing this issue. However, there is nothing special in Russian law to conclude that a tribunal is not entitled to issue such an order. Articles 17 and 19(2) of the ICA Law provide arbitrators with wide discretion to determine the course of the process and grant interim measures.

Procedure

27 Are there any mandatory rules in your jurisdiction that govern the conduct of the arbitration (eg, general duties of the tribunal and/or the parties)?

No. To some extent, articles 18–27 of the ICA Law set up a framework for conducting arbitration. The overarching principles, as per the Model Law, are equal treatment of parties and right to be heard (article 18 of the ICA Law). To the rest, parties to arbitration may agree on applicable procedural rules. In the absence of parties' agreement, an arbitral tribunal may conduct the arbitration in such manner as it considers appropriate (article 19(2) of the ICA Law).

However, the DCA Law (article 45(8)) envisages some requirements applicable to arbitration of corporate disputes. For instance, the "permanent arbitral institution" shall notify a legal entity that shareholders and participants started a corporate dispute provided that such legal entity is a party to the arbitration agreement.

28 What is the applicable law (and prevailing practice) where a respondent fails to participate in an arbitration?

Failure to participate does not prevent an arbitral tribunal from entertaining a claim and delivering an award on the evidence presented before the tribunal. Therefore, default awards are enforceable in Russia. It is of paramount importance to ensure that a respondent received notice of the proceedings in a sufficient and timely manner. Non-service on a respondent is a frequent ground for non-enforcement of default awards in Russia.

29 What types of evidence are usually admitted, and how is evidence usually taken? Will the IBA Rules on the Taking of Evidence in International Arbitration generally be taken into account?

Documents, witness and expert statements generally used in international commercial arbitration are the most common evidence in Russia. Basically, other types of evidence are also admitted.

Parties to arbitration may agree on application of the IBA Rules on the Taking of Evidence in International Commercial Arbitration or other “soft law”. Tribunals apply the IBA Rules as guidelines frequently.

Arbitral awards based on fabricated documents are not enforceable in Russia as contradicting public policy (Information Letter of the Presidium of the Supreme Arbitrazh Court of the Russian Federation of 22 December 2005 No. 96).

Russian arbitration practitioners took an active role in drafting the Prague Rules. One of the leading Russian institutions – the Arbitration Centre at the Russian Union of Industrialists and Entrepreneurs signed the Prague Rules in December 2018. Having said that, in large arbitrations, the IBA Rules will remain the main source of soft law on the taking of evidence.

30 Will the courts in your jurisdiction play any role in the obtaining of evidence?

Pursuant to article 27 of the ICA Law and article 74.1 of APC, Russian commercial courts may order a third party to produce evidence. The court proceedings in aid of institutional arbitration shall be initiated at the request of the arbitral tribunal with a seat in Russia (except ad hoc tribunals) or by a party to such arbitration subject to the tribunal’s approval. Such aid is unavailable for ad hoc arbitrations. There are very few cases where Russian commercial courts have considered such motions. Domestic courts will not secure the attendance of witnesses.

31 What is the relevant law and prevailing practice relating to document production in international arbitration in your jurisdiction?

Document production is not envisaged as a separate stage of arbitration in the ICA Law. Depending on the complexity of a case and other associated circumstances, parties to arbitration or an arbitral tribunal may stipulate this stage as a part of arbitration process. The rules of the existing arbitration institutions in Russia provide a very general regulation of this issue.

Redfern schedules are frequently used in the course of document production. If a party fails to comply with an order for document production, a tribunal may draw adverse inferences against that party.

32 Is it mandatory to have a final hearing on the merits?

It is standard practice, although a final hearing on the merits is not mandatory unless parties to arbitration agreed otherwise. In the absence of such agreement, an arbitral tribunal must hold a hearing if so requested by a party.

33 If your jurisdiction is selected as the seat of arbitration, may hearings and procedural meetings be conducted elsewhere?

Article 20(2) of the ICA Law does not ban the holding of hearings in a place other than the juridical seat of arbitration, unless the parties agreed otherwise. The seat must be named as such in an award.

Award

34 Can the tribunal decide by majority?

The majority rule applies where there is more than one arbitrator. The ICA Law does not specify the voting procedure, stating that such an issue shall be determined by the presiding arbitrator. Neither does it stipulate that in the case of diverging opinions the chairperson shall have a casting vote.

However, the ICAC Rules stipulate that if an award cannot be made by a majority vote, it shall be made by the presiding arbitrator (article 36(3)).

35 Are there any particular types of remedies or relief that an arbitral tribunal may not grant?

If Russian law governs the substance of a dispute, there are no specific restrictions on remedies or relief that can be granted. Among others, orders for specific performance, declaratory and monetary awards are eligible in Russia.

36 Are dissenting opinions permitted under the law of your jurisdiction? If so, are they common in practice?

The ICA Law is silent on this matter. The ICAC Rules allow such opinions (article 36(3)). Dissenting opinions are quite rare. In practice, arbitrators endeavour to reach unanimous awards.

37 What, if any, are the legal and formal requirements for a valid and enforceable award?

Primarily, an award shall be made within the jurisdiction of a tribunal as it is set up in an arbitration clause.

An award shall contain arguments behind decisions made by a tribunal, including on the allocation of costs. It shall state the date and the seat of arbitration along with clear conclusions about whether claims have been granted or dismissed. Unreasoned awards are not enforceable in Russia.

When arbitration is conducted by a panel, it is sufficient to have the signatures of the majority of arbitrators, provided that the reason for the absence of other signatures is indicated.

38 What time limits, if any, should parties be aware of in respect of an award? In particular, do any time limits govern the interpretation and correction of an award?

International arbitrations seated in Russia are not limited in time for rendering awards. It usually takes up to six months to deliver an award from the date of the hearing or the date of the final submission. The ICAC Rules (article 35) prescribe that the ICAC shall take measures to secure completion of the arbitral proceedings in a case within 180 days after the date of composition of the arbitral tribunal. This period is often extended by the ICAC Presidium.

Any party may refer to a tribunal for the purpose of rectifying errors or typographical mistakes in an award within 30 days from its receipt unless another time scale is agreed. If such a request is justified, a tribunal shall correct an award within 30 days (article 33(1) of the ICA Law). A tribunal may correct an award likewise on its own.

Power of award's interpretation may be vested in a tribunal under an agreement of the parties. A tribunal shall give an interpretation within 30 days from the request (article 33(1) of the ICA Law).

Unless parties agreed to the contrary, a tribunal may render an additional award on the request of a party to be lodged within 30 days from an award's receipt. Subject to this, within 60 days from the request, a tribunal shall render an additional award regarding the claims left unconsidered in the course of main proceedings (article 33(3) of the ICA Law).

The above time periods for correction, interpretation and delivery of an additional award may be extended by a tribunal (article 33(4) of the ICA Law).

Article 33 of the ICAC Rules provides for an expedited procedure, according to which relevant bodies and authorised officials of the ICAC and tribunals shall take measures to secure completion of arbitral proceedings within 120 days after the date of the constitution of a tribunal. This period may also be extended.

Costs and interest

39 Are parties able to recover fees paid and costs incurred? Does the “loser pays” rule generally apply in your jurisdiction?

Parties are able to recover fees paid and costs incurred. It is for the tribunal to rule on these issues in an award. A losing party is usually ordered to pay reasonable fees and costs of a winning party.

40 Can interest be included on the principal claim and costs? Is there any mandatory or customary rate?

The ICA Law does not address this issue. Parties can specify interest in their agreement, and an award will be enforceable in this respective part (case No. A40-120756/2009 Arktur v General Motors Uzbekistan).

Challenging awards

41 Are there any grounds on which an award may be appealed before the courts of your jurisdiction?

No, Russian courts are not empowered to hear appeals from awards. Rather, they can set aside awards in a limited number of cases. Awards are immune from judicial review on the merits or on the point of Russian law that applied to the substance of the dispute.

42 Are there any other bases on which an award may be challenged, and if so what?

A list of grounds for challenge is provided in article 34 of the ICA Law. That list repeats the same grounds as they are specified in article V of the New York Convention.

43 Is it open to the parties to exclude by agreement any right of appeal or other recourse that the law of your jurisdiction may provide?

The ICA Law (article 34(1)) envisages that parties may waive their right to bring an action to set aside an award, except in ad hoc arbitration. The Supreme Court clarified the issue in its Review of jurisprudence relating to state court assistance and control in arbitration approved by the Presidium of the Russian Supreme Court on 26 December 2018 (the Supreme Court Review). According to the Supreme Court Review, both parties must expressly agree on the finality of an arbitral award (paragraph 19) provided that an arbitration is run under the auspices of an arbitration institution that received a Russian government's permission to operate in such capacity. The agreement of parties on the finality of ad hoc arbitration award is not valid under the Russian law.

At the same time, if an arbitral award affects rights or interests of a third party (eg, a bankruptcy receiver), such a party may nevertheless file a set-aside application. This right is also confirmed in paragraph 22 of the Supreme Court Review.

Enforcement in your jurisdiction

44 Will an award that has been set aside by the courts in the seat of arbitration be enforced in your jurisdiction?

It is for the domestic court to decide whether an annulled award should be enforced in Russia. Normally, Russian courts refuse enforcement of annulled arbitral awards.

Article IX of the European Convention on International Commercial Arbitration 1961 narrows down the cases when annulment of an award at the place of arbitration can lead to its non-enforcement in Russia.

45 What trends, if any, are suggested by recent enforcement decisions? What is the prevailing approach of the courts in this regard?

Russian courts favour international arbitration. The official statistics comprises the data of enforcing both foreign arbitration awards and judgements and remains stable in recent years. Under available statistics (2016 to first half 2020), Russian courts enforced 60–70 per cent of decisions of international arbitral tribunals and courts.

While reviewing statistics, one should also keep in mind that some refusals and set-asides were triggered by courts' efforts to block evasion of statutory rules on licensing of domestic arbitral institutions.

At the end of 2018, the Presidium of the Russian Supreme Court issued the Review of Jurisprudence relating to state court assistance and control in domestic and international arbitration. It provides helpful guidance and supports a pro-arbitration approach. In addition, in the end of 2019, the Plenum of the Supreme Court issued a 64-paragraphs long resolution to guide courts about their assistance and control functions in relation to international commercial arbitration.

46 To what extent might a state or state entity successfully raise a defence of state or sovereign immunity at the enforcement stage?

The Federal Law of 3 November 2015 No. 297-Ф3 on Jurisdictional Immunities of Foreign States and Property of Foreign States in the Russian Federation finally endorsed the restrictive theory of sovereign immunity. Basically, the Law resembles the provisions of the UN Convention on Jurisdictional Immunities of States and their Property of 2004. In assessing state activity as jure gestionis (commercial), Russian courts shall determine both the nature and the purpose of such activity. Russian judiciary is vested with power to lower the level of foreign state protection based on reciprocity rule.

Article 16 of the aforesaid law enumerates categories of property that are immune from enforcement.

Two award creditors recently attempted to enforce awards rendered against sovereign states. In Tatneft v Ukraine, the court in Moscow refused to enforce the award against Ukraine's diplomatic assets (A40-67511/2017). The court in Moscow later transferred the case to another region, Stavropol, where the court enforced the award against a sanatorium indirectly owned by Ukraine (A63-15521/2018). In Entes v Kyrgyzstan, the courts relied on state immunity and refused to enforce an award against the shares owned by Kyrgyzstan in Mir, a broadcasting company created by CIS states (A40-230382/2018).

Further considerations

47 To what extent are arbitral proceedings in your jurisdiction confidential?

Unlike the DCA Law, the ICA Law does not provide for confidentiality rule. Typically, arbitration agreements and applicable institutional rules stipulate that arbitration and awards shall not be public. Publication of materials may also be prescribed by institutional rules. For example, in accordance with article 46(4) of the ICAC Rules arbitral awards and orders may be published with the consent of the Presidium provided that names of the parties and other identifying details that may impair the legitimate interests of the parties are removed.

48 What is the position relating to evidence produced and pleadings filed in the arbitration? Are these confidential? Is there any way that they might be relied on in other proceedings (whether arbitral or court proceedings)?

Unlike the DCA Law, the ICA Law is silent on this matter. Typically, confidentiality of arbitration covers submissions with evidence in the course of arbitration. In accordance with the ICAC Rules (article 46(1)) unless the parties agree otherwise, arbitration shall be confidential. At the same time, there is no consistent practice regarding this issue.

49 What ethical codes and other professional standards, if any, apply to counsel and arbitrators conducting proceedings in your jurisdiction?

There are no ethical codes in Russia that apply specifically to counsel or arbitrators. However, lawyers who are admitted to advocates' chambers (bars) shall abide by the rules of the Law on Advocates Activity and Advocates and the Code of Professional Advocate Ethics. Still, lawyers who are not admitted to advocates' chambers (bars) are not prohibited from counselling or arbitrating in Russia.

As for the professional standards, those are established for arbitrators by article 11 of the DCA Law. The general requirements are:

- an arbitrator may not be a person who has not reached the age of 25, an incapable person or a person whose legal capacity is limited;
- an arbitrator may not be an individual who has an unexpunged or outstanding conviction;
- an arbitrator may not be an individual whose powers as a judge, lawyer, notary, investigator, prosecutor or other law enforcement officer were terminated in the Russian Federation in the manner prescribed by federal law for misconduct incompatible with his professional activities;
- an arbitrator may not be an individual who, in accordance with his status determined by federal law, cannot be elected (appointed) as an arbitrator; and
- unless the parties have agreed otherwise, an arbitrator should have higher education conformed by a diploma issued in the Russian Federation or abroad.

In addition, pursuant to article 11 of the ICA Law the parties are free to agree upon any professional requirements, which the arbitrators should satisfy.

50 Are there any particular procedural expectations or assumptions of which counsel or arbitrators participating in an international arbitration with its seat in your jurisdiction should be aware?

Extensive production of documents and broad use of witness statements should not be expected in Russia, which is a civil-law jurisdiction.

51 Is third-party funding permitted in your jurisdiction? If so, are there any rules governing its use?

There is no express restriction with respect to third-party funding, although it is not commonly used and there is a lack of court practice on this issue. There are no rules in place governing its use.

Also, the Federal Law On Advocacy and the Bar in the Russian Federation, as amended in July 2020, expressly allows contingency fees for advocates facilitating development of the relevant practice.
